Is parent's love conditional or unconditional?

A Chinese father wants his daughter to inherit his house that was supposed to be given to his son, on the condition that she must stay and thrive in US.

Character Bio

WANG (WANG DAYUN)

WANG (WANG DAYUN)

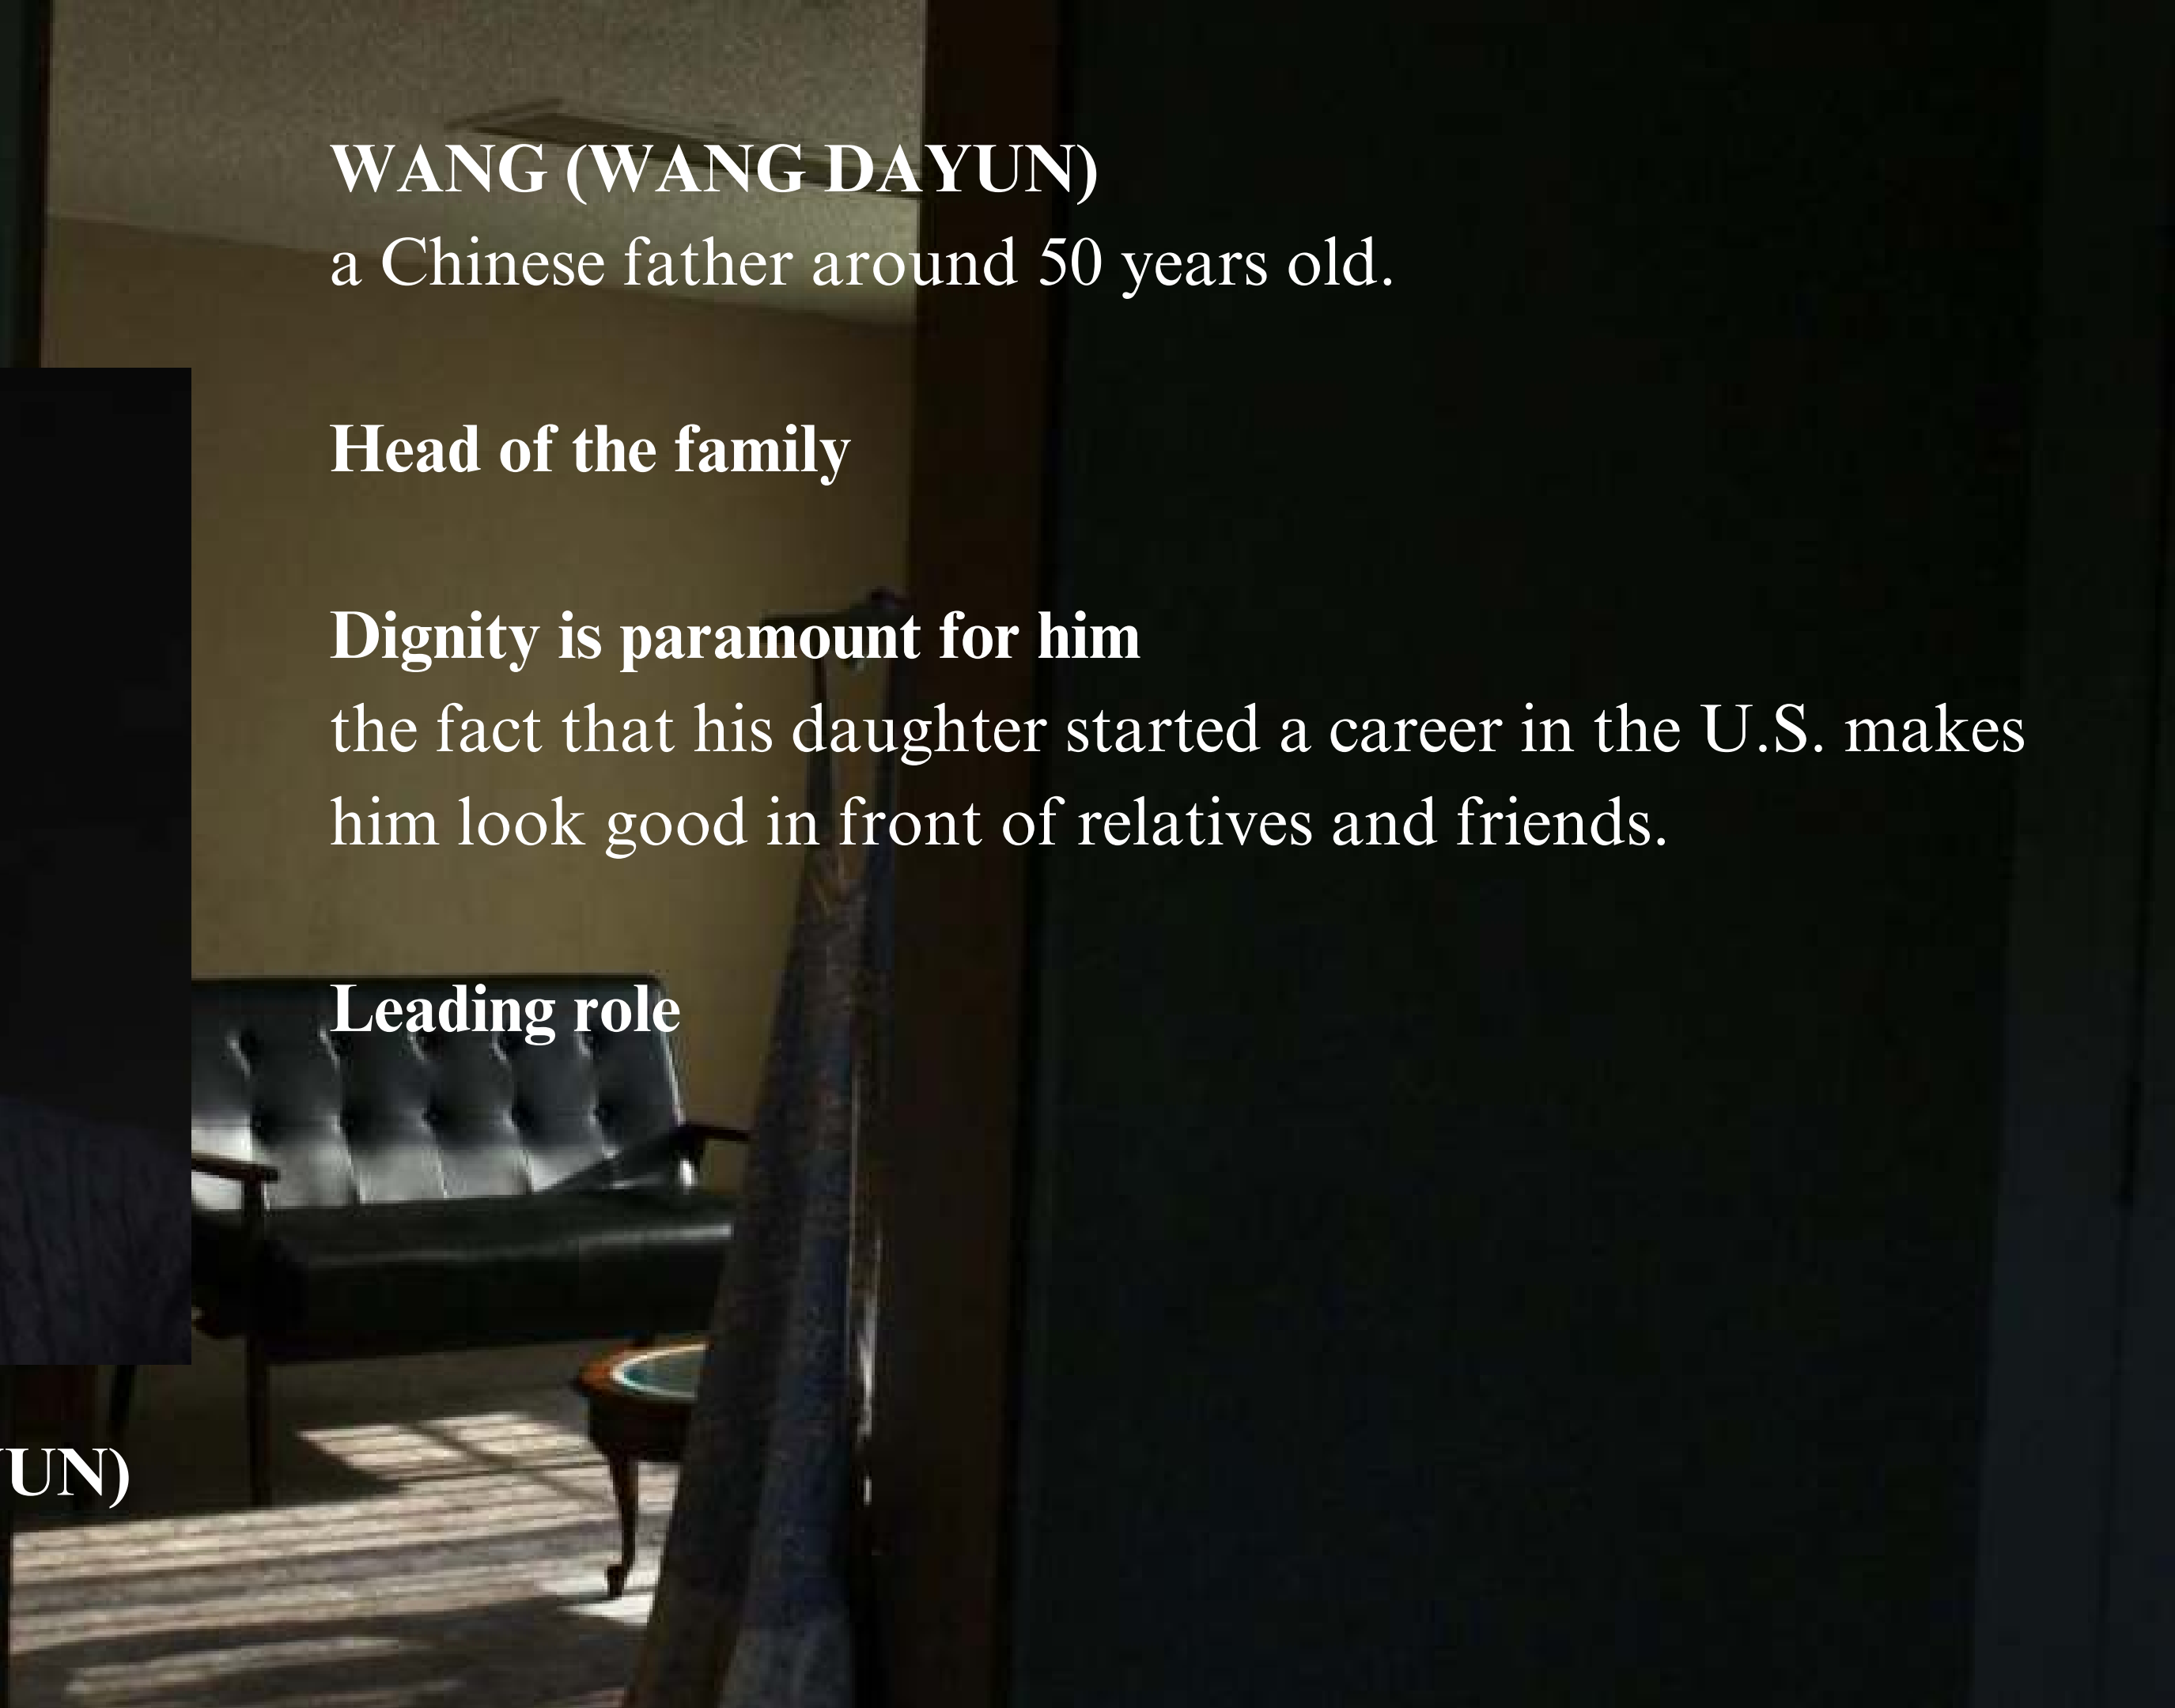

a Chinese father around 50 years old.

Head of the family

Dignity is paramount for him

the fact that his daughter started a career in the U.S. makes him look good in front of relatives and friends.

Leading role

Character Bio

JING (WANG JINGGANG)

a Chinese girl around 27 years old who is currently working as an excellent curator in the U.S.

Her career is still in its early stages, but she has achieved some success.

Want: Longing for parents' unconditional love & Family bond.

Leading role

JING (WANG JINGGANG)

Character Bio

BRIAN

Brian is one of the funders at the gallery where Jing works. He deeply disrespects outsiders like Jing.

Additionally, because Jing is the only Asian curator, he feels that she lowers the overall level and reputation of the gallery.

He is looking for ways to oust her from her position.

Supporting role

Conflict

He wants Jing to stay in the United States because it is a matter of honor for him.

V. S

1. Leave, or stay ?

Unable to adapt to the American lifestyle, longing for family bond, wanting to leave.

Conflict

V. S

2. What is love?

Born in an era of material scarcity, having experienced material poverty

material possessions = love

“If you are outstanding, I will reward you.”

A parent's love should not be contingent on whether their children are outstanding.

Synopsis

Jing, a 27-year-old Chinese curator in the U.S., is considering quitting her job and returning to China.

Her dad, Wang, hears about this and comes to the U.S. pretending he just wants to see his daughter whom he hasn't seen in years. But his real plan is to transfer the family property, meant for his son, to Jing to make her realize the family's hopes for her and encourage her to stay in the States.

Synopsis

Wang spends a day with Jing, feeling proud and bragging to relatives about how much his daughter has grown.

By the third day, Wang sees Jing arguing with her boss, Brian, at the gallery.

Worried she might lose her job and have to go back to China, he reveals his true purpose for visiting and pushes her to apologize to Brian to keep her job.

Jing says she'll apologize to Brian but decides not to take the inheritance. Wang is surprised by his daughter's decision and feels somehow guilty.

Synopsis

When Jing goes back to the gallery, Brian humiliates her in front of everyone again. This time, Wang steps up, ignoring the risk of Jing getting fired, and stands up to Brian to back his daughter.

Why you should watch my film:

Family and Independence: This conflict between familial obligations and personal independence highlights the struggle of modern youth to balance respect for tradition with the pursuit of personal autonomy.

Feminism / Gender bias: Wang's intention to give Jing the property originally intended for his son as a form of reward and hope reflects the implicit gender bias in Chinese or Eastern society. Typically, boys are considered the natural heirs to family legacies, whereas girls must reach a high level of excellence to be regarded in the same way.

The difficulty for minor ethnicity: Jing, as the sole Asian face in her workplace, represents many Asian professionals working in Western countries. Her experience of discrimination at the gallery will resonate with some people.
